Ness El Khir is one of the most prominent charity organizations in Algeria. It was founded in October 2010 by a group of young volunteers in Algiers after being moved by the story of an elderly woman named 'Hadjah Rahma' shared on YouTube. In response, they launched a solidarity campaign through Facebook, which led to the official establishment of the association.

The activities of Ness El Khir range from social to environmental work. On the social side, the organization distributes food and clothes to people in need. It also runs blood donation campaigns and supports patients and orphans. On the environmental side, it organizes beach and park cleaning initiatives like 'Blue Day' and 'Green Day' aiming to raise environmental awareness among citizens.

Through its activities, Ness El Khir helps integrate vulnerable groups into society and encourages young people to engage in volunteer work, contributing to the building of a more united Algerian society.
