A) Comprehension

(07pts)

Read the text carefully, then do the following activities:

Corruption is not just about stolen money; it erodes the very fabric of trust in society. It raises a strongmixture of negative emotions that can leave citizens feeling hopeless, angry, and dissatisfied.

Imagine a doctor who prioritizes bribes over treating the sick. The betrayal of trust can be devastating, leaving patients feeling helpless and questioning the value of life itself. Similarly, when politicians exploit their positions for personal gain, citizens lose faith in the system and feel a deep sense of anger. This pessimism can lead to indifference, hindering efforts to create positive change.

Corruption can also create a climate of fear and insecurity. When the rule of law seems meaningless, people worry about being targeted by those in power. This constant anxiety can stifle creativity and innovation, hindering overall progress.

Part two: Written Expression (05 points) Topic 01 Money laundering isn't just a crime, it's a threat to our country's well-being. When criminals hide their ill-gotten gains, they weaken our economy. Honest businesses lose opportunities, and the government loses tax revenue needed for development. This lack of transparency damages our country's reputation, making it harder to attract legitimate investments. Let's work together to stop money laundering. By reporting suspicious activity, we can keep our financial system clean and our economy strong. Topic 02 ; Laughter is the best medicine, even for a tense classroom. A well-timed joke can defuse tension, refocus students, and make learning more enjoyable. Imagine a math lesson where fractions become pizza slices – a relatable image that sticks! Humor also builds a connection between teacher and student. A teacher who can laugh at themselves (within reason!) creates a safe space for exploration and even silly mistakes. However, humor isn't a magic bullet. Jokes that fall flat or rely on stereotypes can backfire. The key is to use humor strategically, making sure it complements the lesson, not overshadows it. So, sprinkle in the funny, but remember, knowledge is still the main course!.
