Vinca, the Cradle of European Civilization

The Vinca culture flourished from 5,500 to 3,500 BC on the territories of what is now Bosnia, Serbia, Romania and Macedonia. It got its name from the present-day village of Vinca, 10 km east of Belgrade on the Danube River, where over 150 Vinca settlements have been determined. There is no evidence of war or defences in the townships, and it appears that the Vinca were a peaceful society combining low-level agriculture with foraging and trade.

The Vinca produced the first known European examples of a 'proto'-script and were the first people in the world known to smelt copper. They existed in a similar state for almost 2,000 years, following which they appear to have dispersed around the Mediterranean and Aegean.

Vinca settlements were considerably larger than any other contemporary European culture, in some instances surpassing the cities of the Aegean and early Near Eastern Bronze Age a millennium later. The largest sites, some more than 300,000 square metres may have been home to up to 2,500 people. They lived in spacious housing and separated their dead in nearby necropolis (cemetery).

The Vinca tribe knew about trade, handcrafts, art and metallurgy. They had workshops, which means skilled labour. They worked with several styles of pottery and had their own particular artistic fingerprint which is seen in both early Cretan and Sumerian cultures, which rose following the demise of the 'Old Europe' heartland.

Part One: Reading (14 points)

A/ Comprehension (07 pts)

Read the text carefully and do the activities.

In the complex world of financial crime, one method that stands out due to its effectiveness is smurfing. Smurfing is a technique used to launder money and evade regulatory inspections, posing significant challenges for financial institutions.

This method involves breaking down large amounts of illicit funds into smaller, less suspicious sums. These smaller transactions are then deposited by smurfs, who are often recruited by criminal organizations, into various accounts or used to purchase financial instruments to avoid detection by regulatory authorities. The primary goal of smurfing is to evade reporting thresholds and obscure the money trail.

Smurfing comprises the strategic placement and layering of illicit funds to make them appear legitimate. By using multiple small transactions, criminals can avoid triggering suspicious activity reports and maintain anonymity. This process complicates the tracking and tracing of illicit funds, making it difficult for financial institutions and regulatory authorities to identify and intercept money laundering activities.

In the realm of cybersecurity, smurfing techniques can be used to exploit vulnerabilities in financial systems. Cybercriminals often employ sophisticated methods to breach security protocols and gain unauthorized access to banking networks. Once inside, they can execute smurfing operations to launder money, further complicating detection efforts. The use of technology and online banking platforms has made it easier for criminals to conduct smurfing activities remotely, increasing the complexity of monitoring and preventing such transactions.
