Read the text carefully then do the activities.

School violence, including bullying, is widespread: one in three learners is bullied at school every month globally. The growing use of digital devices has exacerbated cyberbullying. In 2019, at least 10% of learners aged 8-10 had experienced cyberbullying. School bullying can leave long-lasting impacts on learners' safety, physical and mental health, and their education outcomes.

Contributing to UNESCO's work on fostering safe learning environments, the UNESCO Chair on Bullying and Cyberbullying, in collaboration with the World Anti-Bullying Forum (WABF), led an international working group to create a more holistic and inclusive definition of school bullying. According to professor James O'Higgins Norman, UNESCO Chair on Bullying and Cyberbullying, "progress in reducing school bullying has been slow. This means we must reassess our understanding and approaches to bullying, especially in our increasingly complex world, where both in-person and online bullying intertwine with personal and societal issues."

When asked about the message to convey to teachers and learners in order to fight bullying, Professor Norman addressed teachers: "Do not accept bullying as normal. Create a safe classroom environment by setting kindness and respect. Remain vigilant for signs of bullying, stay informed about effective prevention strategies, and incorporate anti-bullying content into the curriculum." As to learners: "
